There are so many films to review of this year and this is my 2nd review of this movie on my blog. I actually planned to write one as a special one in my life blog and forgot to do so. The reason being it was released on the same day as another India film, Newton, and was competing in all the major festivals. However, I decided to review it anyway and write a long text with my take on the film. A film that I really, really wanted to watch and is recommended by many friends of mine. I saw this movie in 2 different screenings. The first one, was at a big venue in Mumbai (one of those immense theaters that has a screen as big as 5 meters!). This was the one that had just released the IFS, a Hindi thriller. Also, this is the one I saw in the film festival. The second screening was at a small theater in Delhi, India, and this is the review I've written. My Review of Jab Tak Hai Jaan The directors Ram Madhubani and Shree Dastur, wanted to make something that was unique in the whole film world and that is why they decided to bring back the martial art form known as kali. It is a popular form in India which was made famous by Hemant Kumar and became something like a dance or a fight for the audience. It has been studied and written about for many years and now the duo wanted to bring it to the big screen. However, they chose the wrong medium to do so. This is not because they decided to do something that has not been done before. There are a million films doing this
